The ARUP Analysis of Consultation Responses report focuses on the responses sent (both by post or e-mail) to the address set out in the Planning White Paper, Planning For A Sustainable Future.

In addition to these formal responses, the Department also received a range of other comments on the White Paper proposals, from a variety of sources which are listed below. These comments have also been taken into account in deciding how to take forward the proposals set out in the Planning White Paper.

There were five main groups of comments:

1. Comments made on the White Paper in correspondence sent directly to ministers in Communities and Local Government (CLG) or from Members of Parliament to ministers, reporting or reflecting views of their constituents;
2. Comments made at stakeholder events;
3. Feedback from a series of community consultation exercises conducted by Planning Aid on behalf of the Department;
4. Comments made in response to Government's draft legislative programme; and
5. Views set out in petitions not submitted as formal responses to consultation.

1. White Paper Correspondence

Around 500 letters were received by Ministers in Communities and Local Government directly or from Members of Parliament to ministers, reporting or reflecting views of their constituents over the consultation period from 24 May to 31 August 2007. Of these, over 350 followed a largely standard format, reflecting points of concern raised by various non-governmental organisations.

The vast majority of the largely standard format responses picked up 4 points of concern to Friends of the Earth, namely:

- The proposal to give National Policy Statements more weight than any other statement of national, regional, or local policy could threaten vital policies such as the sustainable community strategy;
- The proposals are bad for local democracy as people would lose their rights to be heard at Public Inquiries, being only allowed a possible 'open mic' style airing of views at the end of the inquiry, with no right to cross-examine and no guarantee that their views will be considered;
- The proposals are bad for climate and the environment as the Government will be able to force through major expansions in airports, roads and incinerators that will lead to a huge rise in greenhouse gas emissions; and
- The proposals will be bad for town centres as removing the "needs test" for retail development will result in more out of town stores, putting local shops and business at risk of unfair competition from the big four supermarkets.

During the course of the White Paper consultation, Friends of the Earth also sent approximately 800 signed postcards to the Prime Minister. Although it was evident that these were printed and written in the context of the Barker and Eddington reviews, and in advance of then (forthcoming) Planning White Paper, the covering letter indicated that the postcards were indicative of "an escalating sense of unease" in regard to issues of "local rights and democracy", the "abandoning" of the "commitment to sustainable development and the fight against climate change." The principal points raised were to urge support for the plan led system and community engagement in the system and to avoid undue priority being given to economic development.

In addition to the standard format letters, ministers received approximately 150 other letters which raised points in relation to the white paper.

Of these, approximately 70 were letters to ministers from MPs responding to constituency concerns; approximately 80 were letters sent directly to ministers from members of the public, businesses, voluntary organisations and community groups. The main points raised in these letters were:

(a) the role of the commission with regard to the public participation

The principal issue of concern raised in the majority of the letters was the perception of a lack of accountability of the proposed planning commission.

There were three main concerns:

- the un-elected nature of the proposed infrastructure planning commission which was not democratically accountable, nor subject to Parliamentary scrutiny or any appeal mechanism

- the role of the national policy statements as the principal reference for decision-making – and that this would not give sufficient weight to the views of local people and
- an overall perception of a reduced or secondary role of the public in planning decisions which was seen as an erosion of the rights of the public to be heard on matters which affected them. There was particular concern about the proposed “open floor stage on the grounds it was understood to be the only opportunity for the public to air their views; that it was only available after the end of the Inquiry with no right to cross-examine; and that there was no certainty that any views expressed at this forum would be properly considered

(b) Climate Change

A minority of respondents raised National Policy Statements and climate change as an issue of concern. Most comments were based on the perception that the proposals for major infrastructure projects amounted to an easing of planning control, with the consequence of an increase in carbon-intensive development, such as roads and airports.

(c) the replacement of the “needs test”

A large number of correspondents raised concerns about the proposed replacement of the “Need and Impact” test with a new test .

Some made reference to press reports which speculated that the proposals would allow more out-of-town shopping centres. This last point – the increased dominance of supermarkets at the expense of local shops – was commonly stated as being of major concern.

(d) the role of the public with regards to local development frameworks and development plan documents

A similar number of respondents were concerned at the proposals to simplify the consultation stages within the local development plan. Many considered that this amounted to a “watering down” of the democratic process within local plan-making, with some believing that the proposals amounted to a removal of community consultation altogether. There were some who considered that the proposals were an attempt to increase central government control.

There was an overall concern that the package of proposals relating to local plan-making and community involvement would have the effect of reducing local people’s rights to consultation or their impact.

(e) Householder Permitted Development Rights

A number of respondents raised concerns about the White Paper proposals to amend the householder permitted development rights.

Views were split on this matter. Some indicated that the measures, particularly in regard to loft conversions, were excessively restrictive. There were forecasts that most of the conversions which are currently permitted would, under the proposals, require planning permission. Some businesses – mainly the loft conversion industry – implied that they would suffer falling orders as a result of this; and that, far from freeing up the planning system from unnecessary development control applications, the proposals would add to them.

In contrast, there were those who indicated the opposite: that the proposed measures would enable a proliferation of home extensions or loft conversions – including development in conservation areas. This last point is actually a misunderstanding of the proposals stated in the White Paper, but it was a commonly held view upon which there was considerable anxiety.

Some were not convinced of the need for change at all. There were also concerns that permitted development would not take important factors, such as design, into account, thus affecting the character of an area. However, some were generally supportive of the proposals – with some keen to know when they would take effect.

(f) Giving priority to economic development

A number of correspondents wrote voicing their concern that the proposals, both in relation to nationally significant infrastructure projects and in relation to town and country planning would give undue priority to economic development and in effect amount to a “presumption in favour of development” which would result in more development being allowed that would have an unacceptable impact.

(g) Green Belt

A small number of respondents indicated that they had concerns that Green Belt policy would be changed. Those that commented on this point were mainly strongly opposed to any change which might weaken control over development.

2. Comments made at stakeholder events

This section of the report focuses on feedback received through stakeholder events and group meetings hosted by Department officials during the consultation period. These varied from giving a keynote presentation to external conferences and seminars, regular forums to discuss planning issues such as those organised on a regional basis by Government Offices, to specific sessions set up for the purpose (for example, a dedicated meeting with the National Planning Forum).

Sessions included a range of key stakeholders in the planning community, including representatives from business, environmental groups and the planning profession, as well as local and regional government stakeholders.

The purpose of the sessions was threefold:

- to ensure stakeholders had a clear understanding of the proposals
- to address any queries about the proposals; and
- to encourage attendees to respond formally to the consultation

Although attendees' backgrounds and particular interest in the proposals were varied as did the degree of feedback, a number of common themes and discussion points emerged which are listed below:

Major infrastructure projects

- How to achieve the (broadly supported) principle of improving infrastructure planning without downgrading environmental protection and sustainability goals
- Whether it was right to focus the blame for delays on the "planning system," recognising that major infrastructure projects are handled by specific approval regimes outside the Town and Country Planning Act and as opposed to other potential influences such as funding delays
- How National Policy Statements would be drawn up, consulted upon and scrutinised – with a mix of comments, mainly concerned to ensure adequate testing. Queries about how National Policy Statements would mesh different regional and local tiers of plans
- How to involve stakeholders, in particular local communities, in the development of national policy statements and the consideration of development proposals. Need to make most of the opportunity of a new system to improve engagement with affected communities. Additional funding shouldn't only go to Planning Aid
- The sorts of qualifications and expertise required by Commissioners and what the accountability arrangements would be
- How to ensure targets for decision-making meet the requirement for efficiency and certainty whilst ensuring all necessary information is considered
- Whether the IPC should have an enforcement or monitoring role as well as a decision-making one

Appeals

- Debate around the concept of Local Member Review Bodies, with most commentators raising concerns, in particular, how to ensure decisions were not taken on a political basis
- How the proposals for speeding up processes and introducing fees may impact on appeals, whether they might deter genuine appeals or appeals by particular groups, or alternatively, whether fast track proposals may actually increase appeal levels. Developer interest in whether fees could be refunded if appeal allowed

Permitted development

- The balance between reducing the need for planning permission with potential for increased requests for enforcement of the new rules
- Whether the new impact rules increase clarity or oversimplify the current procedure too far

Other TCPA proposals

- Discussion, usually concern, about impact of removal of independent examination of Statements of Community Involvement and removal of the requirement to list supplementary planning documents in the Local Development Scheme
- What new resources would be offered to planning departments to support the new reforms?
- How the Government's wish to raise the status of the local authority's chief planning officer is to be carried forward
- What allowance for variable LPA performance had been made in planning for implementation of the new reforms?
- General support for a new PPS4 on economic development, though discussion of more attention required at the regional and sub-regional level
- The need to emphasise the social aspects of sustainable development as well as the economic and environmental

3. Community Consultation Exercise

Planning Aid, on behalf the Department for Communities and Local Government, carried out a community consultation exercise in relation to aspects of the Government's White Paper Planning for a Sustainable Future and associated documents. Those aspects covered:

- (i) "Major Infrastructure Projects";
- (ii) "Appeal Process, Examinations and Appraisals"; and
- (iii) "Householder Permitted Development Rights".

This exercise comprised a series of events, held in July 2007, in each of the English regions to which community groups and interested individuals were invited to discuss the proposals, structured around a series of questions posed by Communities and Local Government. Also questionnaires were given to all participants, containing all the questions referred to above, with space for further comment.

A summary of Planning Aid's findings from this consultation exercise is set out at the end of this annex (Annex 1A).

4 Comments made in response to Government's draft legislative programme

A small number of replies commented on the proposal for a Planning Bill, which will implement proposals in the Planning White Paper.

Some respondents expressed reservations that the Planning Bill would implement the Barker and Eddington reports to speed up the development of major infrastructure projects and planning generally, without re-examining the evidence, or taking account of concerns expressed in the consultation on the Planning White Paper, thereby pre-empting the outcome of that consultation.

Some respondents were concerned that the proposals for infrastructure planning would reduce ministerial accountability, remove people's right to have a say on infrastructure projects, have an adverse impact on the environment and also reduce proper consideration of alternatives to such projects.

Some respondents welcomed the proposal for a Planning Bill. One respondent who welcomed the positive impact on how transport infrastructure projects are approved also noted the need to ensure disabled people have a voice.

In addition, the Secretary of State received around 100 emails in relation to the Planning Bill, which raised points of concern identified by Friends of the Earth which were the same as points of concern raised in relation to the Planning White Paper.

5. Petitions

In addition to three petitions submitted formally as representations to the Planning White Paper which are recorded in Arup report (Background Report A), four petitions were lodged on the Downing Street website.

The first of these was submitted by Alan Beddow, who petitioned to “Keep the ‘supermarket needs test.’” The deadline was 23 July 2007. There were seven signatories.

The second petition, submitted by Jacqueline James, petitioned “to stop the ‘simplification’ of planning rules (Independent Planning Commission).” The deadline was 30 August 2007. There were ten signatories

The third petition, submitted by Antony Oliver of New Civil Engineer magazine, petitioned “to ensure that civil engineers are appointed to the Independent Infrastructure Planning Commission currently being developed by the Department for Communities and Local Government.”

NCE magazine along with the Institution of Civil Engineers, the Association for Consulting and Engineering, and the Civil Engineering Contractors Association feel strongly that civil engineers must be part of this panel. ICE president Quentin Leiper said: “It is vital that high quality professional advice on the engineering issues is on the inside of the planning decision-making process. “This means that at least some members of the [commission] should themselves be chartered engineers. Civil engineers will play a key role in the design and construction of this infrastructure and are ready to play their part in developing the new planning framework. “The experience of civil engineers in responding fully to environmental and social project constraints will be an invaluable input.”

The deadline is 8 December 2007. There were 139 signatories at the end of August 2007.

A fourth petition, submitted by John McKenna, petitioned to ensure that professional civil engineers are among the experts to sit on the proposed infrastructure panel.’ The deadline was 12 June 2008. As at 24 October, there were five signatories.

Annex 1A: Planning White Paper Community Engagement Programme

Report on Community Consultation Exercises carried out July 2007

Summary

This report details the results of a community consultation exercise carried out by Planning Aid, on behalf of the Department for Communities and Local Government, in relation to aspects of the Government's White Paper Planning for a Sustainable Future and associated documents. Those aspects covered:

- (iv) "Major Infrastructure Projects";
- (v) "Appeal Process, Examinations and Appraisals"; and
- (vi) "Householder Permitted Development Rights".

The exercise comprised a series of events, held in July 2007, in each of the English regions to which community groups and interested individuals were invited to discuss the proposals, structured around a series of questions posed by Communities and Local Government. Also questionnaires were given to all participants, containing all the questions referred to above, with space for further comment.

221 community representatives and individuals attended the 14 events, which were facilitated by around 25 Planning Aid staff and volunteers. There were – at the time of writing – 189 questionnaire responses, which have been analysed in the main report. This approach produced a wealth of quantitative data and qualitative comment, acting as a measure of overall approval ratings for specific proposals, detail of how these conclusions were reached and suggestions for further policy development.

The major finding was that the philosophy behind the White Paper proposals, and many of the individual proposals, were seen by most as acceptable, but the details proved contentious, with suggestions that many proposals faced in two directions at once – in favour of speeding-up the system and in favour of enhancing community involvement. Virtually all participants were supportive of the latter direction, but deeply suspicious of any suggestions which were perceived to place the former direction as more important than the latter.

Headline Quantitative Measures

The following is a selection of response measures from the questionnaires:

- 61% thought the public would not have adequate opportunities to get involved in national policy statements;
- 90% in favour of parliamentary scrutiny of national policy statements;
- 81% in favour of requirement for promoters to carry out public consultation on major infrastructure projects;
- 84% thought that 'fast tracking' of householder appeals is good or reasonable;
- 64% opposed to Member Review Bodies to deal with householder appeals;
- 79% did not want the Independent Examination of Statements of Community Involvement dropped;
- 83% had issues with expanding permitted development rights;
- 90% in favour of national restrictions on hard standings.

Summary of Main Response Points

A brief summary of the discussions and the questionnaire responses in relation to each topic is given below.

Major Infrastructure ProjectsNational Policy Statements:

- widespread acceptance of the principles of these proposals but concern that the details do not fully recognise the need for informed and equitable involvement in the planning process for such projects
- National Policy Statements were seen as useful in setting the scene for consideration of individual infrastructure projects
- they should be subject to early and widespread local consultation by a wide variety of means, supported by experts
- effective consultation was seen as the guarantee for local acceptability, rather than legal challenge
- involvement of other public bodies and Parliament was taken by most as essential
- mixed views on the use of existing policy frameworks, but always community involvement was seen as key to acceptability

Major Infrastructure Projects and the Infrastructure Planning Commission:

- proposals again seen by most as acceptable in principle, but with reservations about the details
- proposal for promoter-led consultation was accepted by most, but requiring a legally binding framework
- argument for an Infrastructure Planning Commission was widely accepted
- but deep reservations about the openness and independence of the IPC in providing a platform for community involvement
- legal challenge option again not regarded as sufficient
- the IPC should have a wide range of relevant skills and possibly incorporate community representation

Overall many felt that the definitions and safeguards within the proposals needed improvement to ensure equitable treatment of community views.

Appeal Process, Examinations and Appraisals

Householder appeals:

- agreement with 'fast tracking' of householder appeals, but demands for a longer time frame if community groups involved, objections to the limitation to 'original documents' and many demands for a Third Party right of appeal
- firm opposition to Member Review Bodies as lacking independence and competence
- approval for the Inspectorate determining the appeal method, but enabling community influence and not relying upon legal challenge

Examination of Statements of Community Involvement:

- strong opposition to removal of 'independent examination' of the SCI, with scepticism that general 'duties' are strong enough to ensure effective consultation

Sustainability Appraisal for Supplementary Planning Documents:

- (relevant to half of participants) most supported continuance of Appraisal as a mechanism to ensure full and up-to-date discussion of sustainability issues

Overall there was agreement with some of the ideas for speeding up the system, but likewise considerable support for 'checks and balances' which back up community and sustainability interests in the planning process.

Householder Permitted Development Rights

The 'Impact Approach':

- a good understanding of, and agreement with, the 'impact approach' and support for the 'dimensions' approach rather the current 'volume' approach
- mixed views about application of the proposals in 'designated areas' with some wanting uniform standards, but most concerned to protect effectively the character of widely define areas and from all public vantage points

Domestic Extensions and Hard Surfaces:

- many reservations about precise definitions and interpretations, with most claiming that the proposed allowances are too large, with a particular concern about levels
- strong support for the proposals for dormers
- some uncertainty over proposals for garages and outbuildings, with concerns that proposals do not sufficiently limit impacts and hard surfaces
- strong support for limitations on hard surfaces as per WYG proposal, unless permeable materials are used

Additional Issues:

- significant extra concerns focused on:
  - information flows (full notification)
  - use of 'design guides' for permitted development
  - ensuring construction materials are suitable
  - enforcement

Taken as a whole, there was considerable support for the view that, while the 'dimensions' approach is better, the planning system should be capable of 'micro-management' of the local environment to the benefit of the whole community.

Overall Conclusions

This consultation exercise has shown that, while there was considerable support amongst participants for many of the White Paper proposals, there were many concerns over the details and their implications. The main drift the comments made was that communities should be kept fully "in the loop" in relation to both large-scale and small-scale development proposals and that community and neighbour interests should be protected diligently.

Annex 2: List of Respondents to the Planning White Paper

This is a list of those who submitted comments by post or email to the address listed in the Planning White Paper. This list of respondents does not include the names of respondents who submitted a response, typically a pre-printed post card or email, which raised a common set of points stimulated by one of a number of organised campaigns.

The Communities and Local Government reference numbers have some gaps where we identified duplicate responses, typically where a hard copy of a document had been logged, which repeated an earlier email.
